Weekly Response

How to do a UX accessibility evaluation

Link: <https://makeitclear.com/insight/how-to-do-a-ux-accessibility-evaluation>

- Which of the four principles (perceivable, operable, understandable, robust) should the designer focus most effort on?
- Are any principles outside of a designer's responsibility?
- Should manual accessibility testing always be completed?

Prioritizing Remediation of Web Accessibility Issues

Link: <https://karlgroves.com/2011/06/12/prioritizing-remediation>

- What do you consider to be the highest priority when evaluating a design?
- Should you consult with a developer about prioritizing accessibility issues?
- How would you recommend accessibility improvements if it requires a major overhaul of the user interface?

Template for Accessibility Evaluation Reports

Link: <https://www.w3.org/WAI/test-evaluate/report-template/>

- Is it necessary for user experience and user interface designers to become experts in digital accessibility?
- Who should be involved with creating an accessibility evaluation report?
- As a designer how could you contribute to the accessibility evaluation report?

Developing an Accessibility Statement

Link: <https://www.w3.org/WAI/planning/statements/>

- What is an accessibility statement?
- Why is it important to provide an accessibility statement?
- Who should be responsible for creating an accessibility statement?
